▶ More Details Inside Blake Lively's Wedding Celebrations

Truth be told, Jovovich's outfit is one of the less ridiculous facets of the berserk, intermittently entertaining Resident Evil: Retribution. This time around we track Alice as she seeks to escape a vast, subterranean Umbrella Corporation testing facility in Kamchatka that features monsters aplenty, recreations of assorted capital cities, and clones of characters from the first movie (a plot point which conveniently allows the return of various actors from that film, including a double duty-doing Michelle Rodriguez). Why did Umbrella capture Alice in the first place? Why is former Umbrella chief Albert Wesker (Shawn Roberts) so desperate to remove her from the corporation's clutches that he sends a band of commando-types half way around the world to rescue her? Indeed, given the planet has been overrun by hungry, tentacle-sporting zombies, why would anyone expend so much energy on a single person no matter how form-fitting her clothes? It's tempting to say that Anderson is not really in the "Why?"-answering business. But during the film's final sequence the director explains all while also suggesting that the franchise's nuttiest days are, remarkably, yet to come. B-

D- or B-? We're given two completely different ratings here! EW, your website is extremely flawed.

Where's the "D-"? And how does this mistake (that is nowhere to be seen as far as I can tell) make an entire website "extremely flawed"? What is it with people and their unreasonable, diva-like complaints about any given website, celebrity, or film? This is why I enjoy reading PROFESSIONAL online reviews: no histrionic hyperbole, just matter-of-fact opinion.

EW is a godawful garbage site for mainstream entertainment filled with some of the dumbest writers to grace medium.

Wow, that's really harsh. EW has never been a very "serious" media outlet. But it's entertaining. That's kind of the point.

I saw an article at another website of "why the movies are better than the game" pointing ou that the movies don't ask you to waste hours hunting items and the great line "the films have Milla Jovovich. Point, movies."

I've seen the previous four Resident Evil movies and I will watch RE Retribution as well, despite bad reviews. As for this review it's not that much in line with the grade given (-B). Reviewer, are you awake?

Nah, it's not out of line. These are "B" movies by definition, dumb, action filled, well made and more re-watchable than most B movies.
